I've been researching Reprap 3D printers for a year, and came across the Reprap 3D printer service company Reprapify. I'm curious: What are reasonable expectations to have for such a service? Is it a reputable company with dedicated support employees? Do they have experience in rebuilding Repraps for a customer? Do they try to fix your model instead of just basing their service on prints? Are there similar companies in your experience? Thanks. A: In our experience they use (and are proficient at) the "standard" Reprap 3D printer. Expecting them to construct a completely custom model is a bit like expecting the local Toyota dealer to construct you a car. To quote the reprap wiki: 3D printing with a RepRap is inherently expensive since a standard RepRap could typically only print about 250-300 grams of filament. Even a large-volume order of 500 grams will cost you a pretty penny, so expect the RepRap service to be rather expensive. Furthermore, running a RepRap factory will be a rather complex process for most people (in the absence of relevant skills and experience). Since they are supplying your hardware, they shouldn't be expected to do anything more than correct faults they find on the machine. A: I don't have any direct experience with this company, but the process they follow seems to be similar to that used by Printify. The reason for sharing is that I did also do the first step of creating my print using their service when I first ordered my Reprap. To summarize the steps you can follow: You give them an outline of what you want to print. Even if you plan on doing a large print, it's best to create a set of sketches or drawings of what you plan to make (photos are acceptable too). They send you
